Thanks for the update. Hectic at the moment with Iraq. February 12 to 14 is a long time away under current circumstances but if I am in UK I would love to see you.

Happy New Year and I hope that 2003 is rewarding for you.

Best wishes,

David

David,

I thoroughly understand. I didn't call the Post. They called me. This reporter would like to do a story, but it doesn't look doable if nobody will talk on background. Well pleased to hear that someone with a sharp mind is reading Saddam's prose. By the by, looks like I'll be over in London around February 12-14th. Perhaps a meeting, if you are around?

Happy New Year!

I am uncomfortable with using the press in this regards. It is best done through your contacts within the administration and it is unfortunate that that route is faltering.

The past ten days have been hectic reading Saddam's latest literary effort!

I hope that all is well. Enjoy the festive period and I hope we meet soon in 2003.

Regards,

David

David,

A Washington Post reporter, [REDACTED] has caught wind of our friend. Would you perhaps consider talking with him, on background, about the circumstances? Efforts to correct the circumstances in a more quiet fashion appear to be faltering. Therefore it might not hurt to out her publicly. I have not shared your name and your contact information with this reporter and will not do so unless I have your express permission. Please call me on my cell, [REDACTED] if you would not mind me sharing your information with [REDACTED].
My Best,
[REDACTED]
